There's a new Website for BG schools

Battle Ground Public Schools has a new Website that gives parents and the general public more up-to-date and easier-to-access information about everything from bus schedules to graduation requirements to School Board meetings to Battle Ground Community Education to the Websites of each of the district's 20 schools.

There's also a new and easier-to-remember address for the Battle Ground Public Schools new site: www.battlegroundps.org (However, the old site still works: www.bgsd.k12.wa.us).

The new site was created free of charge as a class project by computer graphics students in the Washington State University (Vancouver) Digital Technology and Culture program, under the direction of Prof. Dene Grigar.

It is more visually appealing, easier to update and more streamlined (with far fewer total pages) than the old site. One way the new site is easier for users is in accessing the site of a particular school. With the old district site, a user clicked his or her way through four pages and had to match a school name from a list with a number on a map before getting to the school's own site. But now, the "Our Schools" tab on the district's new home page leads to the school name and a click gets the user to the school's site.
